The festival was organised by Festival Republic. The three-day event featured headline performances from established artists, as well as showcases from new, indie and alternative bands. The event was promoted as being the successor to the previous year's Pop-a-Pies, and while several acts involved with the festival would go on to form the short-lived group the Baseballs, the majority of acts were featured due to existing connections. The success of the 2003 event saw the festival expanded for the 2004 event. Although it was still technically the main headliner, Count Down combined The Verve's performance from the previous year with a new opening act, and added a second stage: the 'Garage'. There were several other additions to the event, which included an accommodation and after-party ticket package. Another ticket, entitled the 'Door Prize' was given away to the first two hundred people to enter the event. Tickets for the event sold out within three days, and the 'Garage' stage attracted 35,000 attendees. The 2004 event was advertised as being the 'first pop-up pop-up gig' and over the three days events were held at the cricket ground, Middlesbrough College, the tram station and the Middlesbrough Institute of Modern Art (MIMA) on the Saturday, and at the South Bank and New Ocean club on the Sunday. Line-up Friday The Verve - Stretford Hall, Manchester Happy Mondays - Middlesbrough College, Middlesbrough The Good, the Bad & the Queen - South Bank, Middlesbrough Clannad - South Bank, Middlesbrough No. 1 Fan - Middlesbrough Institute of Modern Art (MIMA), Middlesbrough North Country Band - School, Middlesbrough The Wild Swans - South Bank, Middlesbrough Xavier Rudd - South Bank, Middlesbrough The Baseballs - Gate Inn, Middlesbrough Chris Maloney - South Bank, Middlesbrough Burt Bacharach - South Bank, Middlesbrough Minnow & The Finn

The search for low-symmetry semiconductors with an incomplete band gap between the valence and the conduction band continues. By combining computational and experimental methods, an isostructural honeycomb framework consisting of Fe(II) centers tetrahedrally coordinated to 1,4-benzenedicarboxylate ligands has been identified. Antiferromagnetic couplings up to J/kB = -1.89 K in the low-temperature magnetically ordered state have been determined by magnetic susceptibility measurements.NASHVILLE, Tenn. (WTVF) — Mayor John Cooper is trying to stay in the spotlight. He launched his campaign for mayor Thursday night, telling thousands of his supporters he wanted a fresh face on the ballot for Nashville. "I've served my entire life in public service in public leadership and I want a new voice in this city, a new voice that will stand up for what I believe in, too," Cooper said. RELATED: List of six candidates to replace Mayor Megan Barry in October election Cooper is one of seven candidates in the crowded field vying for the mayor's job. More than 6,000 people turned out at the Greater Union Baptist Church for Cooper's announcement. It's a little surprising given Cooper has been the mayor since 2011. He is a former councilman from that district and served four years as Metro Council Chairman. Still, Cooper says he has something to prove. He was a reluctant candidate for mayor. "I love Nashville. I want to see it as a better city but I've heard about some of the things that have been going on for a while now in Nashville and I think it's important for me to be here and make a difference," he said. His term ends in 2021, but if he wins, he could serve two more. He knows there is little room for error, saying the city has been "entrenched in dysfunction." "It's hard for me to imagine a world where we have a functioning city where people's lives work and people feel like they have some rights and some pride in their jobs. It can't be," Cooper said
