What they get out of a bachelor's degree at the University of Puget Sound is know-how, not debt or just plain financial wellness. "At Pacific Lutheran University, they're known as the royalty of debt," said Bronte McEwan, interim vice president of student affairs at PLSU. "Many of our graduates have started companies, created jobs, and impacted lives and communities in profound ways. This is their story." Puget Sound's reputation as a national leader in community and public service attracted the attention of K-12 superintendent of public instruction Tom Torlakson, who identified Puget Sound as a great fit for his statewide program.
