Story The Mirror's End is a story about you and yourself: an adventurer, an immortal explorer of lost lands... We travel to different dimensions in order to search for the nonexistent light that will allow us to escape this world and reach a parallel reality. Gameplay High emphasis is put on the discovery of the different elements of the gameplay and user interface. Some puzzles are even based on the original (old) interfaces of the classic computers where the game is set. Player's Interaction The experience is deeply and very explicitly directed towards the player and his immersion. The player is the "end" of the story in a way: in the Mirror's End, there's only one player, a kind of "anti-computer". Fantasy The game was conceived as a fantasy space adventure game, mixing elements of contemporary FPSes and the grand heritage of 2D games. We mix traditional solutions and convenient game mechanics with entertaining original content. I've been playing with Unity recently and I decided to test my new skills on a project of mine. After about three days of in-depth documentation reading, tweaking and debugging I finally succeeded in compiling the following game : Inspired by those excellent answers, I decided to give it a try. I knew about "new Project>Player" and "new Project>Tutorial". My attempts of finessing the Main Menu and the About-Screen, were fruitless. I then tried to mix the "additional scene" functions of "new Project>Additional scene" with "new Project>Player" and "new Project>Tutorial". Again, the results were less than perfect... actually, I don't know if those are correct terms. After 4 days of your documentation reading, tweaking and debugging, you finally succeeded. I'm sure that you must have learned a lot about Unity. I don't claim to be an expert, but I sure have learned. Just make sure to follow our guidelines and you'll probably be able to use Unity more effectively. To sum it up, I copied your code and it worked on my computer. Now I want to make something else, but I keep stumbling on the same problem. You did it and I'm sure I'll make it. It's the year 1955. Dr. Emmett Smith has discovered the process of time travel, and temporal agents are now on the run

Happy new year! It's Season 3 on WoW! New Year is coming to a close and all of a sudden I felt kind of bored of the things I had been doing in this blog, so I decided to go back to one of the things I had been writing for the longest. I am the organizer of the group called Comrades' Day. Comrades' Day was meant to be a way to unite Warcraft fans of all sorts, who worked on the game together, or at least played together. Or in some cases, you'd just want to meet people who like working on the game as much as you do. I plan to go over the history of the website, how Comrades' Day came to be and how it works today! Comrades' Day started when I was in school and I used to share my passion for the game with other students. There were people who enjoyed the game as much as me, and so we started gathering. There was a very famous meeting in Moscow in which I met Boradgya, and he invited me to a gathering in Saint-Petersburg, which you can read about here. Then people started to post about their gatherings, and from there Comrades' Day was created. Between those years, I was often going to the events, helping to make the events take place or working in one of them. From there I became friends with many people, and I learned a lot of new things. I became really passionate about the project and about the community, and the enthusiasm grew and grew until the project

2018 In our last blog, we looked at the story and impact of how events unfold for Citi in the UK and Europe, where the bank is conducting a joint trial of a new trading model which the bank has globally branded as 'The Way'. To read that blog, click here. In a more general sense, we illustrate here how our strong regulatory network and capabilities provide us with a strong defence should markets or other risks arise. The highlight of this may be found in the animated video embedded here: Against the backdrop of recent global developments, we touch briefly on the continued evolution of markets, as well as the economic environment and outlook for the US, Europe and Asia. Continued evolution in markets - pressures from digitalisation and artificial intelligence It's no secret that the market environment today is far more challenging than the time of even the most recent crisis. Leverage in many traditional financial assets is greater than it has ever been. And, as the market grows increasingly networked, trading is increasingly conducted using algorithms, with the potential to undermine some of the more traditional benefits of an exchange. Moving to the future, we see even greater levels of volatility expected in the years ahead, likely to have a greater impact on existing markets than the market turbulence of the recent past. We've already outlined how digitalisation presents a significant risk to financial markets, particularly as it relates to price discovery, and also by their nature are extremely opaque and offer little transparency into the workings of markets. Further, the emergence of the artificial intelligence industry means that many algorithms are already able to calculate trading strategies while bypassing many human signals. As a result, we see two potential futures for financial markets. For complex trading strategies it could lead to greater efficiencies, but if a significant number of these activities fail to attract sufficient interest, instability could result, and a tilt towards less risky strategies which are more prone to backfire. That's not to say that AI will impact with a positive influence on prices, although we stand ready to study and address the potential impacts of these as they unfold. But the issue is nonetheless one which requires greater attention. Selected countries are likely to be affected differently by the evolving market environment, with emerging markets in particular more likely to benefit initially than developed markets. Nonetheless,
